

The Uncrowned king of the Jungle

Life turned grim for Kosy the lion when he lost his teeth. Known for his huge appetite and ambition to be crowned king of the jungle, Kosy now lay sick, all but two molars fallen out, humiliated and helpless.

News of Kosy's dental disaster spread quickly, met mostly with amusement. The tailless rabbit, recently escaped from Kosy, grinned in delight. The monkey claimed Kosy got sick from eating a zebra named Zebu who had consumed poisonous leaves. The vulture, who had witnessed the incident, confirmed that after eating the ailing Zebu, Kosy began shaking and developed zebra-like stripes. Though the stripes disappeared, his teeth began to fall — incisors, canines, molars — until only two teeth remained.

The owl, jungle's symbol of wisdom, was shocked. Other animals, like the deer and the fox, listened intently as the vulture tallied the fallen teeth — twenty-eight in total. The hyena mocked, "How can Kosy be crowned now? Who's heard of a toothless king?"

Despite Kosy's aspirations, he had never been crowned since the jungle followed democratic rules. As the owl once declared, every creature had its place and no one should rule over others. Most animals celebrated Kosy's fall from glory. But the great ape, showing compassion, insisted that they call Vet — a kind, retired veterinarian who lived near the forest and was respected by all, even Kosy.

Vet examined Kosy and concluded the zebra's toxic diet likely caused the dental fallout. He gave an antidote and vitamins but warned Kosy wouldn't survive long without teeth. Seeing the concern, Vet suggested calling a dentist.

The dentist, though nervous, agreed to come — intrigued by the promise of Kosy's teeth as payment. With Vet's help, he examined Kosy and planned to make dentures, preserving the two remaining molars. Some animals weren't pleased but didn't protest.

A week later, the dentures were ready. Kosy, slightly uncomfortable but pleased, was warned not to eat tough meat.

Then came the surprising announcement — Vet declared the "crowning" would happen on Sunday.

Excitement and confusion spread. "Is Kosy going to be king just because he has dentures?" the owl questioned. Kosy, misunderstanding, believed his coronation as king was finally at hand. He invited all animals to the ceremony.

On Sunday, a huge crowd gathered near Kosy's cave. The lion, seated proudly on a rock he imagined to be his throne, awaited his crown. But instead of a royal coronation, the dentist fitted crowns — dental caps — on Kosy's remaining molars. "The crowning is done!" he announced.

Kosy was stunned. Realizing his misunderstanding, he blushed in embarrassment. The crowd burst into laughter, even Mrs. Kosy couldn't stop her tears of amusement. The dentist accepted Kosy's fallen teeth as payment and left with Vet, puzzled by the laughter.

The owl, with a satisfied nod, concluded, "The laws of the jungle remain unchanged."
