

Make your momappy

Our mothers helped create a strong foundation for our lives through our early years. Our mothers raise us with affection, protecting us from all trials and tribulations of life. We try to make our mothers happy on Mother's Day through small acts. But what truly makes our mothers happy is when their children lead peaceful and calm lives, when they are so glad, when their relationships are well, when they are prosperous, and are focused in the right direction. Yet, instead of being grateful to the Almighty, we have become enamoured with gifts of the Giver. In the process, we forget the Divine.

Our soul, which gravitated away from God aeons ago, has been trapped in the wheel of transmigration, cycling through creation and yearning to return to the Source.

On Mother's Day, we should remember, recognise and be grateful to our spiritual master. Just as a mother gives her child gains in the physical world, a spiritual master helps the disciple attain gains in the spiritual world. When we come to a spiritual master, they help us awaken to oneness of the Almighty's creation, exhorting us to live and serve selflessly. When we do so, we find that life becomes harmonious, calm and peaceful.

Summary of the Editorial

1. Mothers lay the foundation of our lives, nurturing us through affection and protection.
2. They shield us from the trials and hardships we face during our formative years.
3. On Mother's Day, we try to express our gratitude through small gestures and acts of love.
4. However, what truly makes mothers happy is when their children lead peaceful, calm, and meaningful lives.
5. Mothers are content when their children are prosperous, emotionally stable, and morally focused.
6. Despite this, people often forget to thank the Divine, becoming absorbed in the material gifts rather than the Giver.
7. This material focus causes us to drift away from God, neglecting the spiritual essence of life.
8. Our soul, estranged from the Divine since ancient times, is caught in the cycle of transmigration (rebirth).
9. This soul yearns to return to its Source, seeking liberation from the worldly cycle.
10. On Mother's Day, we should also show gratitude to our spiritual master, who guides us on the inner journey.
11. Just as mothers help us grow physically and emotionally, spiritual masters aid us in growing spiritually.
12. A true master awakens us to the oneness of all creation, inspiring us toward selfless living.
13. Living selflessly leads to a harmonious and peaceful life, aligned with divine purpose.
14. Gratitude to both physical and spiritual nurturers brings fulfillment and balance to life.
15. The real celebration of Mother's Day lies not just in giving gifts, but in living a life that brings joy and peace to our mothers and the Divine.
