

Guess What?

During lunch break in Class V at Silver Valley Girls School, the fifteen girls of the smallest class were laughing and enjoying a new game called Guess What?, invented by the bright and popular Sandhya. The game involved guessing quirky facts about classmates, and everyone eagerly participated. When Rita asked, "Guess what Sandhya's favourite remark is?", the class chorused, "I'm feeling bored!", revealing a truth everyone knew—Sandhya got bored easily.

Despite being intelligent and topping her class, Sandhya was restless. She was a tech-savvy girl who loved gadgets and computer games but lost interest as soon as she mastered them. Her parents, particularly her mother, were worried. At a parent-teacher meeting, her mother lamented that Sandhya never read books. The teacher agreed and noted that since Sandhya didn't read, her classmates followed her example.

Her mother tried to use this as a motivator, telling Sandhya she was setting a bad example. But Sandhya just stormed off saying, "I'm feeling bored." Then one day, Sandhya fell seriously ill with a high fever. After nearly a week of being bedridden, when she finally started recovering, she again complained of boredom. To keep her occupied without tiring her, her mother began reading to her. Initially uninterested, Sandhya gradually got engrossed in the story.

When her mother had to step out the next day, she played an audiobook version of Peter Pan for Sandhya. To her surprise, when she returned home, she found the power had gone out and Sandhya was frantically searching through a cupboard full of books for the printed version of Peter Pan. "I want to know what happens next!" she cried. Her mother handed her the book, and Sandhya began reading—truly reading—for the first time.

A week later, Sandhya returned to school as a transformed person—a book lover. She even influenced her classmates to start reading. One day, when Rita suggested reviving the Guess What? game, she asked, "Guess what Sandhya's favourite hobby is?" The class shouted in unison, "Reading!" Next came, "Guess what Sandhya's favourite magazine is?" Again, the answer came promptly: "Dimdima!"

Sandhya proudly pulled out the tenth anniversary issue of Dimdima to show her friends, but before she could even finish her sentence, the magazine was snatched from her hands. When the bell rang, all fourteen of her classmates were crowded around, reading it together.
