

Meditation is experiment and experience

Science moves outwards; i move inwards. This inward movement i call meditation. You have to take three simple steps for this inward movement, and the fourth happens on its own accord.

The first step is observing all your activities; that is your body and its acts – walking, chopping wood, drawing water from the well. Remain a witness. Don't do it like a robot.

Second, when you have become capable of watching and witnessing your body and its activities, then you can take the second step: watch the activities of your mind – thoughts, dreams, imagination. Just remain a witness, as if you are standing by the side of the road and a procession of thoughts is passing on the road. You are not part of it. You are just a mirror reflecting, without any judgement – because the mirror has no judgement. A beautiful face...the mirror does not say, 'Great!' An ugly face...the mirror does not say, 'my god!' The mirror simply reflects whatsoever comes before it. Exactly one has to become a pure witness, without any judgement, evaluation, good, bad. Then a strange experience happens as your witnessing grows, thoughts start lessening. In the same proportion, if you have ten percent witnessing, then there are ninety percent thoughts; if you have ninety percent consciousness, awareness, then there are only ten percent thoughts. A hundred percent witness, then there is just pure nothingness. This is the state of no-mind, this is the door to the third and the last step.

Now watch subtle emotions, moods. Thoughts are not so subtle. Moods – a certain shadow of sadness, a certain joy...one is concerned with the body, the second with the mind, the third with the heart.

And when you become capable of watching the third too, the fourth happens on its own accord. Suddenly a quantum leap and you are standing exactly at the very centre of your being, where there is nothing to be aware of. Awareness is aware of itself; consciousness is conscious of itself. And this is the moment of ultimate ecstasy, samadhi, enlightenment, or whatever name one prefers to give it; but this is the ultimate, there is nothing above it. There is no way to go beyond it, because wherever you go beyond it you will still be a witness. If you start witnessing the witness, you have not gone above it; you are still a witness. So, it is the very end of the inner journey, you have come home.

And this is my whole teaching. It is absolutely scientific; it needs no belief; it needs only experimentation. And i don't ask anybody to trust me; i ask only to experiment and experience.

I know that it will happen to you because it has happened to me, and i am just as ordinary a human being as you are. I don't claim to be a prophet or a saviour or an incarnation of God; i don't claim any specialty. The only difference is you are still asleep, and i am awake. It is only a question...sooner or later you will be awake, too.

Summary of the Editorial

1. Meditation as an Inward Journey – Unlike science, which explores the external world, meditation is the process of turning inward.
2. Three Simple Steps, One Natural Occurrence – Meditation requires three conscious steps, and the fourth happens naturally.
3. Step 1: Observing Bodily Activities – One must observe daily physical activities like walking, working, or fetching water with awareness, not mechanically.
4. Step 2: Witnessing the Mind – After mastering body awareness, one should observe thoughts, dreams, and imagination like a neutral mirror, without judgment.
5. Neutral Observation Leads to Thought Reduction – As witnessing increases, thoughts gradually decrease in direct proportion.
6. Reaching the No-Mind State – With 100% witnessing, thoughts completely disappear, leading to a pure state of nothingness.
7. Step 3: Watching Emotions and Moods – After thoughts, one must observe subtle emotions like sadness and joy without getting involved.
8. Step 4: Awareness of Awareness – When emotions are also witnessed, a spontaneous shift happens, leading to pure awareness, where consciousness is aware of itself.
9. The Ultimate State – Samadhi – This final stage is enlightenment, where one reaches their true self, beyond thoughts, emotions, and identity.
10. No Further Beyond – Once awareness reaches this point, there is nothing higher to attain. Even witnessing the witness does not go beyond this state.
11. Coming Home to Oneself – This process leads one to the core of their being, a state of absolute realization.
12. No Belief Needed – Only Experimentation – Meditation is purely scientific; it does not require blind faith but personal experience.
13. Not a Prophet, Just Awake – The author claims no divine status but states that the only difference between him and others is wakefulness.
14. Everyone Can Attain It – Just as he has awakened, others can too—it is only a matter of time and effort.
15. The Ultimate Teaching – Meditation is about self-exploration, not religious dogma, and anyone willing to experiment will experience its truth.
